GEORGIA BUILDING SOLD.
May Be Taken to Southern Illinois for Courthouse.

The Georgia State building at the World's Fair, a replica of the home of the late General John B. Gordon, may be removed after the Fair to a Southern Illinois county for use as a courthouse.

The sale was made yesterday by the Georgia World's Fair Commission, through David P. Leahy of the Lincoln Trust Company, to W. J. and A. J. Stedlin, the local party, who are now negotiating for the sale of the building for courthouse purposes in an Illinois county. The purchase price was about $200.

The building follows the old Colonial style of architecture and is considered one of the most imposing State buildings on the grounds. The building was built largely of Georgia lumber and cost $200,000. Builders claim the structure is so substantial that it could easily be moved ten miles in its entirety without damage. The building is full two stories high and occupies ground space of 6000 feet.
